

"How to Shop for a Good Counselor"

by Merri Ellen Giesbrecht of www.cure-your-depression.com

The medical journals reveal that counseling therapy is by far the most necessary for recovery from depression. There are a few bad counselors out there so how do you find a good one?

Unfortunately, a counselor does not need to prove their credentials before putting in a listing in the Yellow Pages or the Super Pages. Anyone can list their name under 'Counselors', 'Marriage Counselor,' or even under 'Psychologists' even if they don't have the credentials. So, be sure to ask for credentials!

First, here's a list of credentials to be aware of...

PROFESSIONAL LICENSES OR DESIGNATIONS

LMFT - Licensed Marriage and Family Therapist

LCSW - Licensed Clinical Social Worker

LMSW - Licensed Master Social Worker

ACSW - Academy of Certified Social Workers

LIS - Licensed Independent Social Worker

LCS - Licensed Clinical Social Worker

LICSW - Licensed Independent Clinical Social Worker

LMA - Licensed Master's in Social Work - Advanced Clinical Practitioner

CSW - Clinical Social Worker

LPC - Licensed Professional Counselor

NCC - National Certified Counselor

CCC - Canadian Certified Counsellor

CRC - Certified Rehabilitation Counselor

CCRC - Canadian Certified Rehabilitation Counselor

RCC - Registered Clinical Counsellor (B.C. Canada)

RRP - Registered Rehabilitation Professional (Canadian)

R. Psych or C. Psych - Registered Psychologist (the 'C' stands for Certificate of Registration)

-I'm writing this from Canada so if you are in another country, you should also check with credentials of your own country. You can do this by asking your own family doctor or local community mental health centre.

Secondly, a good counselor should be a good listener – that's an obvious but not always a reality. If you don't feel heard, you won't get anywhere.

Thirdly, you must feel comfortable with the counselor. So, 'shopping' for a good counselor is sometimes a necessity. You may have to try one or two out. Sound like too much of a bother? Well, here's a resource that may help with that...
